✉ TWO-WHEELED TRANSPORT

I have been in Dubai for two years now, and one thing I really miss is women riding bicycles around the city. In my home country, this is very common and very convenient for short distances. While riding a bicycle may be good exercise, two-wheelers might also save fuel or lessen the traffic jams if nothing else. If women in Dubai are longing for this, please voice it, and someday, this wish may really come true!

Swapnali Dhongade

✉ RUSH HOUR RABBLE

I am a regular user of the Metro, and believe that Dubai has a unique selling point over all other cities due to this marvellous transport service. Everything in the Dubai Metro is good, but I find one thing very annoying. In the morning, when people go to their offices, they are literally running for the trains. In this hurry, they often push hard, even pushing elderly travellers and children in their rush. My suggestion is that the timings should allow travellers to easily catch the train.

Haseeb Ahmed

✉ MANNERS MAKE A METRO

I have been living in Dubai for four and a half years, and I think the Dubai Metro is the best transportation service in the UAE. I just want to share some tips with all the passengers who use the Metro during peak hours. Metro etiquette demands that you allow riders to exit the train before you enter. Also, if you're in the train, please be so kind as to exit quickly. Let's all keep this simple principle in mind.

With 16 workshops and other exciting events planned over the four-day programme, whether you're looking for an introduction to manipulating light or tips to improve your post-processing there's sure to be a workshop to suit your photography needs.

Hamlet - The Clown Prince

NOVEMBER 9 – 10, 2012, 7.30PM

CENTREPOINT THEATRE, DUCTAC, MALL OF THE EMIRATES

Directed by Rajat Kapoor and performed by India's leading theatre and Bollywood artists, Hamlet - The Clown Prince is a chance to see Shakespeare's masterpiece as you've never seen it before, as a group of blundering clowns take the revered text and willfully sabotage it, misinterpret it, find new meanings and try haplessly to understand the famous bard's convoluted language. But, through all their meddling, they promise to take the audience on a hilarious journey to the very essence of Hamlet and attempt to find a context for the play that is relevant for our own times.

The art of a new generation

The emergence of young local artists and opportunities is reigniting the city's passion for the perfect picture.

It's been a few years since Dubai's first art galleries opened their doors and now the city has become a burgeoning art scene. And, with an emerging culture of young, Dubai-based artists, the city has become popular not just for its many attractions but for new galleries, artists, art fairs and opportunities for collectors.

Among the young artists making the most of this exciting time is Emirati artist Sara Al Haddad, who is the latest artist to take part in Ductac's artist in residency programme.

Born in 1988, Al Haddad received her BA in Graphic Design from the American University in Dubai. Her artistic journey began—like many other artists from the region—with the exploration and use of hand-made crafts during her childhood.

"There's a local interest in developing and nurturing a new generation of Emirati artists, which also offers various initiatives to encourage and support them. The notion of what art and artists is has changed in the UAE in the past few years; art has become a tool to reflect on and preserve the Emirati culture and self-expression," explains Al Haddad.

The various residency programmes now available at many local galleries, including Ductac, provide the perfect opportunity for these—often underrepresented—grassroots artists to exhibit new and experimental practices.

WALID AL WAWI

“My works are inspired by the use of crafts in Emirati culture from the past, including embroidery and crochet.”

Al Haddad explains, “The programme offers a great platform for emerging artists to develop their style and niche; it allows them to gain the experience needed to contribute to the growing art scene in Dubai. My works are inspired by the use of crafts in Emirati culture from the past, including—but not limited to—embroidery and crochet. I use these techniques with a modern twist to produce my artworks.”

Similarly, the jamjar artist residency programme concludes the year with UAE-based artist Walid Al Wawi. With a background in animation and design, Al Wawi's minimal approach uses words to channel ideas through script-like sketches.

Al Wawi himself identifies the emergence of a new breed of local artists, saying, “Recently, with the influx of art galleries and competitions, more attention has been brought to art as a field. Encouraging people who previously had thought establishing a career in the arts wasn't a possibility, now they proceed creatively with more confidence. Artists in the UAE are still trying to find their place in the international art community, considering the big gap between the Western contemporary and the Arab traditional arts.”

But what is it about our region that has seen a new generation of young artists begin to break through? Al Wawi explains, “Growing up in an area that changed so quickly helped me understand and develop a much faster process in my art work. Anything that one can see, that one can be inspired by, may be gone in an instant. We're left with no choice but to run across the vast international culture that brought ideas from all over the world, helping us develop a style of contemporary art in a mix between the modernised language of expression and my own views as a born and raised Arab.” ●

Make cooking child's play

Encouraging children to eat a balanced diet begins in the kitchen.

The majority of children will, quite adamantly, claim they don't like healthy food. However, once a child decides they will try their cabbage or have some fruit instead of sweets they often struggle to hide their enjoyment.

Unfortunately, a lot of the uncertainty these days stems from the fact that many children are simply unaware of where their food comes from. Many of today's kids have become so used to eating things in plastic cartons or straight out of packets that the sight of fruit and vegetables, raw meats or fish, and uncooked ingredients often bewilders them.

Zaigham Haque, co-founder and director of SCAFA—a new culinary school in JLT—says, “In Dubai, a lot of people are unaware of the importance of healthy, nutritional food, which is why the younger generation's diets are based on fats, sugars and starches. The constant promotion of the fast food craze and low prices of junk food do not help teach the younger generation the importance of a well-rounded diet. Inviting the younger generation to cook will encourage them to have a different approach to food—they will start to realise the finished product is worth the time and effort.”

Teaching children to cook can not only be beneficial to their independence, but it can give them the knowledge they need to prepare nutritionally balanced meals throughout their lives. While you're not going to hand over the family dinner preparations to a four-year-old, simply getting them involved in the cooking can be the first step towards creating a mini Michelin starred chef.

Haque says, “The easiest way of getting kids involved is by inviting them to prepare their favourite dishes in a healthier way. For instance, kids love French fries and tomato ketchup. Why not teach them a healthier way to prepare fries in the oven with almost no oil and with organic ketchup?”

While the family can teach kids so much, many children these days are even starting to attend cookery classes—surely a sign that this generation could pave the way for a future of healthier eaters? Haque agrees that a passion for cooking at a young age should be encouraged. He explains, “One of the benefits of a cooking class is that it enables the children to not initially worry about preparing the ingredients, making the cooking process seem simpler than expected. It enables children to focus more on the methods and finished product, which will then spur them on in the future to start from scratch. The classes also make children more food conscious teaching them the dos and don'ts about food, culinary techniques and kitchen skills such as safety, knife skills and food handling.”

While it's easy to blame work, lifestyle and convenience for many children's poor diets, the simple fact is that preparing healthy meals is better for the whole family, tastier than many grease-laden fast foods, often the cheaper option, and can provide quality family time while setting children up for a healthier and happier future. ●

Simple steps

Why not try giving your child one of these easy tasks to make them feel more involved in meal preparation?

Washing the vegetables - while explaining to them how we need to ensure that natural ingredients are cleaned because they grow from seeds in the ground or on trees.

Mixing ingredients - so that they can understand how most meals take a combination of ingredients to produce a taste they enjoy and that not everything comes straight from a packet.

Choosing meals - why not lay out a selection of ingredients you already have in the kitchen and ask them what meal they would like? This will help them to start creating their own meal ideas and learning which ingredients will go well in different dishes.

Subtle but strong

Infiniti's flagship M56 saloon conceals a powerful punch behind its discreet and demure outer appearance.

Such is the subtlety of the big Infiniti's inspired design, that you may not realise immediately how much of a performance car it really is. There is not a straight line in the body, instead it's all sinuous curves and smooth surfaces, and refreshingly unlike anything else in the category. Those curves have another advantage beyond simply just looking good—the car has a very low co-efficient of drag number, just 0.27, which makes for both quiet cruising and good fuel economy.

This is the top of Infiniti's M range, which also includes the smaller M37 saloon and coupe versions. The larger car is a full-size 4-door rear wheel drive saloon, somewhat similar in size and ambition to a 5-Series or E-Class, if not yet in reputation.

But step inside and that may change. The 2013 model is big on safety and offers an almost bewildering array of toys and technologies to keep you out of harm's way. All 2013 Infiniti M models come fully equipped with their super-safe Advanced Air Bag System (AABS) with dual-stage supplemental front air bags, front seat-mounted side impact supplemental air bags, and roof-mounted curtain side impact supplemental air bags.

Other safety and security features include Infiniti's Lane Departure Warning (LDW) and Lane Departure Prevention (LDP) systems. These use a small camera behind the windshield to warn the driver of a potential unintended lane departure with a visual display and audible buzzer. If you don't get back in the middle of the lane, the car will do it for you.

You'll also find Blind Spot Warning (BSW) and Blind Spot Intervention systems, available as part of the Technology Package. BSW illuminates an indicator light if another vehicle is detected in the blind spot area, and BSI will take corrective action if you stray too close to another car. Other available safety features include Intelligent Brake Assist with Forward Collision Warning and Front Pre-Crash Seat Belts.

But, it's what is under the bonnet and under your right foot in the M range that is the most impressive. The M56 offers more power and better fuel economy from its 402hp 5.6-litre V8 than the previous generation M45's 4.5-litre V8. In use out on the road it is powerful, quiet and extremely effective, and drives the rear wheels through a seven speed automatic transmission.

Specify 'Sport' during purchase and your M56 gets a number of exterior and interior tweaks as well as sport brakes, bigger 20-inch wheels and tyres, magnesium paddle shifters and Infiniti's 4-Wheel Active Steer (4 WAS) system.

In short, the Infiniti M56 may not be the most dramatic executive sports saloon available on the street. It just happens to be one of the most effective. ●

DAC finds brand support

Homes r Us extends support to Dubai Autism Center by enriching its facilities with special gifts for children.

REACHING OUT

Homes r Us recently launched an online community initiative as part of its mission to accept and embrace individuals with special needs. As part of the programme, senior representatives from Homes r Us visited the Dubai Autism Center (DAC) and presented members with special gifts as part of a wish list. The wish list included musical toys, coloured threads, cameras, CD players, computer speakers and electrical items.

"At Homes r Us, we believe it is our responsibility to support community initiatives and I would sincerely like to thank all our fans for their wholehearted contribution," said Srikanth Parthasarathy, Senior Vice President at Homes r Us.

"Visiting the Dubai Autism Center was a moment of great joy, and the time we spent with the kids was a great experience. We are extremely pleased to have this opportunity to support DAC and it gives us immense pleasure to be contributing to this noble cause in our own small way."

Founded in 2001, Dubai Autism Center is the largest, most innovative and comprehensive non-profit organisation in the UAE serving children with autism. Before the centre was established, many did not know what autism meant, however, with special awareness campaigns every year since, people now have a better understanding of the condition.

Homes r Us has been at the forefront of social causes, and with the launch of the online community initiative, the lifestyle brand has set another milestone in making a significant difference to the lives of many. Established in 2003, Homes r Us is a complete source for home furniture, furnishings and lifestyle offerings, blending functionality and fashionable living.

NYPD Red

By James Patterson

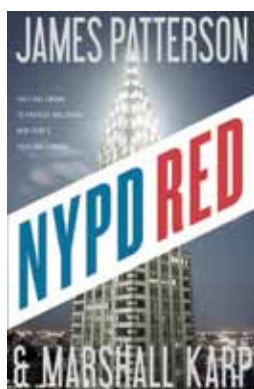

BOOKS

New York City is swept up in the glamour of Hollywood on Hudson, and the city is filled with red carpets and celebrities, who all revel in the glitz and bright lights of movie premieres, as well as the private parties for the rich and famous, and flashes of the paparazzi's cameras.

But with this many famous faces in one place at the same time, special task force NYPD Red is on high alert to safeguard the city—and with so much at stake, they can't afford to make a single mistake.

But when a world-renowned movie producer fatally collapses at a breakfast with other high-profile executives, top NYPD Red detective Zach Jordan is the first one on the scene. Along with his intellectual and beautiful police partner—who also happens to be a former flame—Detective Kylie MacDonald, Jordan sets out to find out who the murderer might be.

But one relatively quiet death was just the beginning, and a series of brutal, public, and horrifyingly spectacular crimes begin to take hold of the city, sending New York into a state of complete chaos and putting the role of NYPD Red on the ropes.

Take The Crown

Artist Robbie Williams Label Island Records

After a brief reunion with Take That, followed by a sabbatical to get married and have his first child, the cheeky chappy of British pop is back with his ninth studio album, rather precociously entitled Take The Crown.

While he was once the golden boy of the pop charts, Robbie Williams appears to have struggled with who he actually is for a long time. While songs such as Angels, Let Me Entertain You and She's The One showed off a raw and impressive vocal ability, some of his other efforts have fallen short of the mark to say the least—the scatty and frankly embarrassing Rudebox being a prime example.

However, legions of fans across the world have not deserted him through his darker days—both musically and personally—and Rob's return is a welcome one, with many citing him as a pillar of "proper" pop music and one of the few genuine entertainers left in a world of manufactured pop stars. As a whole, Take The Crown is a mixed bag. Williams is one of the few artists who seems genuinely unafraid to do whatever he feels like doing—and he's done it with this album. The first single, Candy, provides a tongue-in-cheek, summery sound, while the overall air is brash and brazen—a clear reminder to the music industry that the singer may have been gone for a while, but he's certainly not ready to be forgotten.

Beat the bullies

November marks international anti-bullying awareness month. What are the key signs of bullying and how can you try to avoid it?

It isn't always easy to define bullying. A child may encounter bullying attacks that are physical, verbal or emotional. It is the latter that is often most common and also the most difficult to cope with or to prove to others. Emotional bullying, such as ridicule and exclusion have, unfortunately, become more common through the increased use of social media outlets, texts or emails and is known as cyber bullying. However, this type of bullying does not just affect children and teenagers. Rather surprisingly, many adults will experience some form of bullying during their life, whether it is within the work place, from a so-called 'friend' or their peers.

Spot the signs

It is often extremely difficult for a child to tell an adult that they are being bullied. Instead, a child may indicate that he or she is being bullied through their behaviour. Not all children who are bullied or are bullying others will want it to be known, so it is important to talk with children who show signs of being bullied or bullying others. These warning signs can also point to other issues or problems, such as depression.

Tips for kids

- A good line of defence is avoidance. Know when to walk away.
- Use humour to defuse a bully who may be about to attack. Try making a light-hearted remark rather than fighting back.
- Try to tell the bully to leave you alone in an assertive yet calm manner, then simply walk away from the situation.
- Recruit a friend. Observers find that having a friend on the playground is one of the most powerful protectors, especially for boys.
- In general, seek out the friendly children and build friendships with them.

Children and teenagers may :

- Be frightened of walking to and from school
- Beg you to drive them to school
- Be unwilling to go to school
- Feel ill in the mornings
- Begin truanting
- Start to do poorly at school work
- Come home regularly with clothes or books destroyed
- Come home extremely hungry (if bullies taking dinner money)
- Become withdrawn, start stammering or show a lack of confidence
- Become distressed and anxious or stop eating
- Cry themselves to sleep or start having nightmares
- Continually 'lose' their pocket money or possessions
- Refuse to talk about what's wrong
- Have unexplained bruises, aches, cuts or scratches
- Become aggressive, snappy and unreasonable at home
- Show a loss of friends or avoidance of social situations
- Avoid going out to play

Take action at work

1. Tell them you want to talk to them privately about the incident and that one other person will be present. Ensure that the 'other person' is a neutral individual who will be a reliable witness.
2. At the meeting, tell them why you think this behaviour is a bad idea. Don't make accusations or bring emotion into it.
3. Tell them what you would like them to do instead in the future.
4. Tell them why you think this will be better for both of you.
5. Seek an agreement with them that things will change.

WORKPLACE WOES

Adult bullying

Although many people may associate bullying with their schooldays, sadly it can often continue into adulthood, especially in the workplace. Research has found that many employees will experience some form of bullying at work during their career. Perhaps you may even feel that you are being bullied at work but you don't know how to explain it. Again, there are signs of bullying to look out for and take action against.

- Being yelled or shouted at
- Receiving put-downs about your intelligence or competence
- Your telephone calls or other communications are ignored
- Your contributions are ignored
- Someone interferes with or sabotages your work
- Being given bigger workloads or shorter deadlines than co-workers
- Being accused of making a mistake on purpose
- Being put down in front of others

Spot the signs

- Being left out from work-related social events
- Coworkers storming out of the work area when you enter
- Being given the "silent treatment"
- Not being given the praise you thought you deserved
- Being treated rudely or in a disrespectful manner
- Co-workers refusing to help out when you ask
- Spreading rumours about you that aren't true and that nobody denies

Tips for adults

Employees who experience bullying find that it's just as hard to explain and stop the abuse as it is to suffer through it. However, conscientious employers will have a policy for dealing with inappropriate behaviour among their employees, including bullying. But, unfortunately, not all employers are competent, and it can often be difficult for the individual who is being bullied to know how to handle the situation and deal with it efficiently.

If you ever need to confront a bully, or wish to help someone else do so, it helps if you avoid bringing emotion into it any more than you have to. Although bullies are insightful about what makes people 'tick', and how to press their most sensitive buttons, they are—at the same time—often utterly lacking in the empathy necessary to respond appropriately to how people feel.

BYTES & PIECES

Gary Thuerk

In 1978, an overly aggressive sales rep from Digital Equipment Corp. sent out a pitch to several hundred names on an early Arpanet mailing list. Not only did Gary Thuerk get fired, the feds running Arpanet threatened to throw him in jail. How times have changed. Today, 80 to 90 per cent of all email

“Of the some 400 emails that Thuerk sent out, he received only a few complaints” is spam, and nobody seems to know where it's coming from or how to stop it. And, in fact, Thuerk's original spam did work. The company sold $13 million or $14 million worth of the DEC machines through that email campaign. Still, little did he know how his action that day in May 1978 would lead him to be the major force in terms of changing business computing.

Of the some 400 emails that Thuerk sent out, he received only a few complaints. “The best complaint came from a guy at the University of Utah, who said when he got in the office in the morning, he couldn't use his computer because the spam had used up all his company's disk space,” the former sales rep once recalled.

Ironically, Thuerk himself isn't easy to reach. He doesn't publish his phone number or email address, and he has an industrial-strength spam blocker for his email account.

Today, the Chicago native is selling computer gear at HP. Is he embarrassed about unleashing the scourge of spam on the world? Not really. “I'm the first one to do it, and I'm proud of it,” Thuerk said in a recent interview.

The Cookie Monster

With the news that Google has been told to change the way it gathers data and Facebook has removed its face recognition, online privacy is a fresh concern.

The internet is a public network of millions of computers, all sharing information. On the internet, information moves back and forth across public lines and through numerous connections. As with all public lines, eavesdropping is possible.

There are two ways that a site can obtain information about you: When you request to view a page, a certain amount of information is disclosed in the page request that your browser makes on your behalf, and, if you fill out and submit an online form, that information is sent to the site.

Of course, it doesn't stop there. Websites also need to store that information to recall when it wants. While your browser is getting a page from a website, the site could ask your browser to store a small amount of information about you on your own hard disk. This stored information is called a cookie. A site that stores (or “sets”) a cookie will ask your browser to let it read the cookie the next time you visit. Meanwhile, any information you give out online can be stored on the website's own computer servers.

A web page can't find out your email address, name, or any other personal information, unless you explicitly provide it. You are in control—no one can obtain personal information about you unless you allow them to.

When you ask to view a web page from a site—which you do each time you click a link or type a URL—a small amount of information is given to the site. This information includes your operating environment, your internet address (not your email address), and the page you're coming from.

Why those three things? Well, they each have their own reasons.

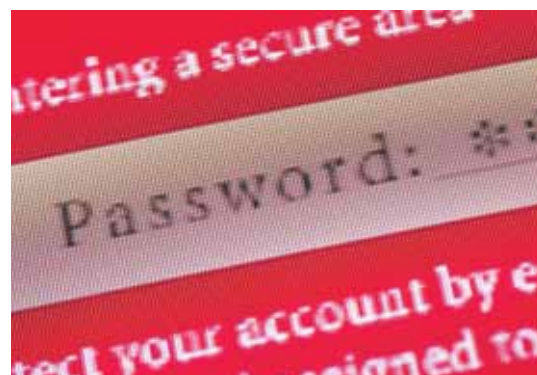

Knowing your operating environment helps the site present the page in the best way for your screen. For example, the site might learn that you use the French version of a Safari-based browser on a Windows 2000 computer.

Your browser must tell the site your internet address (also known as the internet protocol, or IP address) so the site knows where to send the page you are requesting. The site can't present the page you want to see unless it knows your IP address.

The site is also told which page you were reading when you clicked a link to see one of the site's pages. This allows the site to know which site referred you, which will obviously become important when paying for advertising, and knowing who the website needs to thank for referring you to them.

The best way to keep your information private is to be cautious about providing it to others. The internet is a public network, and you should assume that when someone asks you for your name, phone number, address, and other information, they might share that information with others.

Providing your name, address, and phone number on the web is like having a listing in the telephone book. In fact, if you are listed in the white pages of the telephone book, your name, address, and phone number are probably listed in online directories and other databases on the world wide web.

If a website asks for information about you, always check the site's privacy policy before proceeding. What kind of personal information is the site gathering, and how will it use it? Will the information be shared with others, for purposes unrelated to your dealing with the site? Can you access some or all of the information in order to inspect or update it, and how does the site keep intruders from viewing the information? And, finally, how can you contact the website in the case of you having any questions or problems?

Did you ever wonder why almost all of Google's services are free of charge? Well, now you know. That old saying, "there's no such thing as a free lunch," still holds true. You may not be paying Google with dirhams, but you are paying with information. That doesn't have to be a bad thing, but you should be aware of it. ●

DISNEY WARS

In a shocking announcement linking two of the best-known names in the movie business, Disney said last week that it is buying Lucasfilm, maker of the Star Wars films, for $4.05 billion. The deal means that Disney will now be the studio behind Star Wars: Episode 7, which, the firm said, is slated to be released in 2015.

AN APPLE A DAY

Apple shook up its executive ranks last week, saying the head of store operations is leaving after just six months on the job and the long-serving head of its iPhone software development is exiting next year. Apple didn't say why the two are leaving, but both were involved in recent mishaps, including the Maps app, so it's no surprise.

YOUNG DEPENDENCY

Four out of five under-25s feel "lost" without the internet, a survey has found. The opinion poll of 1,000 adults shows how a generation that has grown up with the web has become dependent on it. Just three out of five people over the age of 25 have the same problem. The poll also found that twice as many women as men look online for a wedding ring.

TWITTER RESURGENCE

As Hurricane Sandy pounded the US Atlantic coast, knocking out electricity and internet connections, millions of residents turned to Twitter as a part-newswire, part-911 hotline that hummed through the night. Almost a year ago, Twitter gained attention for its role in the rescue efforts in tsunami-stricken Japan.

Modern military

Fashion gets new marching orders, so pull off the tough-chic trend with pretty yet practical pieces.

GI Jane

Instead of erring on the side of camouflage prints and surplus army parkas, there's a new breed of pieces that point to an updated take on utilitarian silhouettes and cavalry-influenced details. Take inspiration from Victoria Beckham's collection which presented an olive-green-and-black palette that gave way to a particularly feminine crop of military-inspired sheaths. Opt for a pencil dress in olive green and pair the look with a chic beret or army-style hat and you're good to go.

Her

Demand attention

Forward march to modern army gear with a twist. Opt for a brass-buttoned jacket with a peplum or a reimagined parka with black lace detailing. Biggest of all is the return of camouflage. As with any heavily themed trend, the trick is never to go overboard—one piece per ensemble is always enough. Why not choose a camouflage cardigan and throw it on over skinny jeans and a plain black T-shirt for a laid-back look?

Military precision

With take-charge tailoring and top-brass buttons, these looks command attention. Keep it chic, like Victoria Beckham, rather than combat style. Enlist pared-down details and close-fitting, feminine cuts. Alexander McQueen and Burberry Prorsum also took the army theme to a new level this autumn/winter. They kept their lady-like silhouettes, yet added military accents like epaulets, large buttons and breast pockets. Both designers opted for military shades, with army green, black, navy and mustard making up the perfect military colour palette.

Marching orders

Incorporate the coolest military boots into your off-duty wardrobe. Go for traditional Dr Marten style boots or chunky, lace up boots for an edgy alternative. Knee boots look great with skinny jeans or paired with a long trench coat in the style of Alexander McQueen.

Full combat

While the military trend is all about army greens, it can still be broadly interpreted. From cropped collared coats to loose fitting cargo trousers, the trick is to add subtle hints of military style to your look. Go for a fitted pair of trousers or jeans in earthy tones with large pockets above the knees for a modern take on the combat trouser. Throw on a simple camisole top, flat sandals and a chic, military jacket for a casual yet stylish look.

Him

Soldier on

Here's a secret: You'll always be in style if you add a little military to your wardrobe. It's an enduring trend in men's clothing that never really leaves because it's always masculine and very cool. Whether you choose a laidback parka from H&M, the navy tone elegant coats of River Island or the army style anoraks also available at H&M, the key to rocking the military movement is the fit. Khaki greens, camouflage prints, parkas and army caps stand to attention.

FASHION OPINION

Style goes super-sized

Over-sized clothing has been one of the most popular trends this autumn that I've seen.

From jackets to skirts and shirts, fashionistas are trying to get the simple, minimalistic look by going big. If you aren't a daredevil when it comes to fashion, you can adopt this look into your own style by simply using an over-sized blazer or jacket in a neutral colour such as beige, navy blue, white or black.

It won't distract from your outfit if it's rich in detail, but it will serve to complement and complete your look.

For those who really won't break the excessive barrier, you could try adding an over-sized element to your look with a supersize bag from Zara or Givenchy's autumn/winter collection, or adopt the element of excess by checking out Prada's limited edition big shades—a cute alternative. The detailing on the side is super classy and can be worn with day to night looks. Maison Martin Margiela for H&M are set to release plenty of over-sized items in their collection, in stores on November 15, which is great for fashionistas who want to look stylish without spending too much, as their haute couture inspired collection will be available for everyone's budgets. The three most appealing over-sized pieces of the collection are definitely the over-sized 'mom jean', the roomy navy blue blazer and the extravagant duvet coat—although this might be one for your travels abroad. So make sure you get saving for the collection's release and add your own piece of over-sized clothing this season to stay on trend.

"Try adding an over-sized element to your look with a super-sized bag or shades"

Swiss bliss

For visitors from all over the world, Zermatt epitomises preconceptions of Switzerland: high-alpine, awe-inspiring and original.

On the Italian border of the canton of Valais in the west of Switzerland, at the end of the 30 kilometre-long Nikolaital, lies Zermatt, the village that sits at the foot of the most photographed mountain in the world.

One word says it all: Matterhorn. At 4,478 metres, the legendary peak towers over the town of Zermatt, acting like a giant, rocky magnet to ski fans, snowboarders and mountaineers. On July 13, 1865, Edward Whymper led the first successful ascent of the mountain. The climb took 32 hours, but the descent was marred by tragedy when four of the team's members crashed to their deaths in a 1,200-metre fall down the North Wall. Many mountaineers still come to conquer the peak, but, sadly, a few unlucky individuals never leave. Their names are etched in stone in the town's cemeteries as a poignant reminder of its power.

The crystalline, state-of-the-art Matterhorn Museum centres on an authentically recreated Valaisan village. It provides a fascinating insight into mountaineering, the dawn of tourism and the lives Matterhorn has claimed. Must-sees include Roosevelt's letters, Raymond Lambert's reindeer-skin boots (made to measure after his toes were amputated) and the infamous rope that broke in the 1865 tragedy.

Zermatt sits in the shadow of the mighty Matterhorn with every chalet craning to get a view. It's a compact, attractive place, car free but with souped-up electric golf buggies the main choice for getting around.

Think Zermatt and you'll probably think money—and you'd be right. However, there are some serious mountains here and plenty to keep free-rider snow enthusiasts occupied for a number of weeks.

Zermatt links with Cervinia forming the Matterhorn Ski Paradise and 313 kilometres of pistes. Lift pass prices are about as high as you can get, but if you are not heading over to Cervinia then don't pay the extra for the pass and simply play in Zermatt's 183 kilometres of slopes. Practically all of the Zermatt slopes are above the treeline, with the runs served by the Sunnegga funicular being the main exception.

Zermatt is one of the few places remaining in the world where you can snowboard 365 days a year. In the summer the Matterhorn glacier has 22 kilometres of pistes and a good park and pipe. In the winter it provides the starting point for a huge 2,263-metre vertical descent back into the village.

There are lots of narrow cat tracks linking up areas and the runs down to the village are especially guilty. However it's not the pistes that are going to be attracting the snowboarders, it is the stack of quality off-piste and freeride routes that this place offers.

Skiers and snowboarders prefer going down to climbing up. The town doubled in size during the ski boom that raged in the 'Sixties and 'Seventies. For the rich and stylish, Zermatt is a place to see (as well as ski) and be seen (skiing or otherwise).

Zermatt is the lively and bustling village at the mountain's base. Don't come here expecting to get away from it all. It's a popular resort town with over 100 hotels, and people and shops are everywhere. Thankfully, Zermatt is car-free. Anybody driving needs to park one village away, in Täsch, and take the train in to town. Instead of cars, all the hotels and shops shuttle people and goods around in small electric buggies.

The cog railway from Zermatt's town centre to Gornergrat (at 2,883 metres) takes you into the heart of the mountains. When you arrive, you will—on a clear day—be able to enjoy fantastic views of 29 4,000 metre peaks, including the Matterhorn itself, the Breithorn (4,164m), the Monte Rosa (Europe's second-highest peak, at 4,633m), and the second longest glacier in the Alps—the Gornergletscher glacier. It also takes in a number of other interesting features, including forests, meadows, gorges, tarns, bridges and tunnels.

Zermatt's varied flora and wildlife is another of its natural draws. The largest attractions being chamois and ibex—different varieties of mountain goat which have adapted to live in the steep, rocky terrain.

While first and foremost a skier's paradise, there is still plenty of hidden charm left in the village, in the dark, wooden chalets down narrow streets and in the small, centuries-old hamlets that surround the village. The shops, restaurants, and hotels are first-class, and the hiking and panoramic lifts are some of the best in Switzerland. Most of the incredible panorama (except for the Matterhorn) is hidden until you travel above the village, which is where this splendid region really shines.

There's no denying it: Zermatt is Switzerland's top travel destination, and the Matterhorn is quite possibly the world's most recognisable mountain. The Matterhorn graces almost every Swiss travel brochure, and everybody who travels here has some idea of what to expect. But the reality is much more powerful. ●

THE MIGHTY MATTERHORN

Southern-fried tangle

Crackling with heat and danger, Lee Daniel's The Paperboy is a vivid and engrossing hot mess.

Did you know?

- Tobey Maguire was cast as Ward but dropped out due to scheduling conflicts.
- Alex Pettyfer was the first choice for the role of Jack James. Meanwhile, Nicole Kidman replaced Sofia Vergara.
- Pedro Almodóvar (Oscar winner for Talk to Her) was approached several times to helm this project and seriously considered making it his first English-speaking feature, but finally declined.

NEW RELEASE

To attempt a simple description of The Paperboy is to risk exhausting the normal, critical vocabulary. The movie, directed by Lee Daniels and adapted from a novel by Pete Dexter, is, for starters, a domestic melodrama, a Southern Gothic, a legal thriller, a coming-of-age-story, a high-toned exploitation picture and an earnest lesson in journalistic ethics and race relations. None of that quite captures it, however. The Paperboy is what cinema scholars might call a hot mess.

In the hands of Daniels—who directed Precious and Shadowboxer—Dexter's complex tale pulsates with wayward desire and confused motivation. Not a few of the characters are driven to distraction by the swampy Florida heat and their own longing, and the movie itself seems to share their state of sweaty agitation. It is by turns lurid, humid, florid, languid and stupid, but sometimes, also, splendid.

Jack Jansen (Zac Efron) is the younger son of a small-town newspaperman (Scott Glenn). A former high school swimming champion, Jack vacillates between sloth and seething disaffection. His father has checked out, his Yankee would-be stepmother (Nealla Gordon) is a snob and a racist, and Jack's only friend is the family's maid, Anita (Macy Gray), who also supplies the film's retrospective voice-over narration.

Gray and Efron's scenes together—sometimes playful, sometimes awkward, sometimes painful—provide a few moments when The Paperboy feels anchored in, and curious about, an actual social reality. Gray's performance, by far the least showy, does not exactly ground the film but at least introduces a hint of emotional gravity. And Jack's relationship with Anita, even more than the one between the Emma Stone and Viola Davis characters in The Help, conveys some of the complicated intimacy that existed between African-American domestic workers and their white employers in the civil-rights-era South.

NICOLE KIDMAN IMMERSSES HERSELF IN THE CHARACTER

But most of the movie is devoted to the crazy doings of white people in various states of rage or frenzy—or both. A particular scene, in which Jack is stung by jellyfish, and his pal Charlotte Bless (Nicole Kidman) offers treatment, has already achieved some notoriety, though it's hardly the strangest or most shocking moment.

Kidman, garishly made up and harshly lighted, is a vampy, campy whirlwind: a femme fatale, a good-time girl and a tragic diva with a husky drawl and teased hair. Charlotte, who has a special affection for prisoners, has promised herself to Hillary Van Wetter (John Cusack), an uncouth alligator hunter convicted of killing a hated local lawman. During one jailhouse visit, Charlotte and Hillary pantomime intimacy across a crowded room, an encounter that manages to be grotesque, absurd and also kind of entertaining.

That mixture—with a dash of social conscience and a splash of gruesome violence stirred in—pretty much sums up the feverish mood of The Paperboy. Accounting for the plot is a bit more difficult, since coherent storytelling is even lower on the list of Daniels' priorities than protecting Efron's modesty. Jack's brother, Ward (Matthew McConaughey), a crusading journalist, shows up with a colleague, Yardley Acheman (David Oyelowo), to investigate the apparent miscarriage of justice that sent the cretinous Hillary to the slammer.

The mutual resentment between Jack and Yardley, tinged with racial animosity and macho rivalry, is one of many interesting and volatile undercurrents in this tangled and chaotic movie. Daniels is much more interested in sensation than in conventional suspense, so the murder mystery is pushed unashamedly into the background.

Which is just as well. You can find a neat, serviceable whodunit on basic television or the paperback rack at an airport bookstore. A hot mess like this, even if it makes you dizzy and a little queasy, is a much rarer phenomenon, and it's worth seeking out if only so you can say that you saw it with your own eyes. ●

THE ONE TO 100 OF MOVIES

The Fifth Element

When a laid-back 23rd-century New York City cabdriver meets an orange-haired, genetically engineered punk babe in The Fifth Element, they cannot communicate directly because they don't speak the same language. But there is one shared phrase they understand: “Big badda-boom.”

Well, who doesn't grasp that concept at the start of summer blockbuster sweepstakes? Flash, gimmicks, special effects and noisy pyrotechnics are so pervasive that they even reached France by 1997.

As directed by Luc Besson, whose La Femme Nikita hit a high-water mark for chic sensationalism, The Fifth Element is a big-budget French effort at the Hollywood cartoon blockbuster game. It's also proof that Besson, whose big ambitions have made him one of France's highest-profile directors, is also his nation's worst nightmare.

Besson pitches this gaudy epic at a teenage audience that values hot design over plot coherence, hollow excitement over reason. The story describes a mission to save humanity, but as far as the film itself is concerned, it's already gone.

Besson began writing the script when he was only 16 years old, though he was 38 before he was able to bring it to the screen. The film does look novel at times, thanks to the pulp exuberance of its electric colours and bold, jokey production design. It delivers that “big badda-boom”, but not much else.

Do-gooder Chopra

Priyanka Chopra was in a very generous mood recently. The actress returned a cheque for Rs18 lakh to film producer KC Bokadia, who was financially distressed. Bokadia, of much-delayed Deewana Main Deewana fame, managed to scrape together the cash for his leading lady, but she graciously returned it.

Bhagat to write screenplay

Chetan Bhagat, India's bestselling author is all set to make his debut as a screenplay writer with Kick, a remake of the 2009 Telugu super hit. Bhagat confirmed the news on Twitter, writing, “Happy to share with you that I'll be writing the screenplay of ‘Kick’ starring Salman Khan and directed by Sajid Nadiadwala....Couldn't have asked for a better screenplay debut.”

King of comedy killed

Jaspal Bhatti, the legendary actor and comedian who touched many hearts with his humorous take on social ills, recently died in a road accident. Bhatti is survived by his wife, Savita, son, Jasraj Bhatti, and daughter, Raabiya Bhatti. The 57-year-old actor was on his way to Jalandhar to promote his new film, Power Cut.

Quitting in style

How to avoid burning bridges and creating enemies when you decide it's time to leave.

TOP TIPS

Whatever the reason might be, many employees eventually choose to quit their jobs. Even if your work situation has been fine and you've enjoyed your time at the company, your final days can end up being the thing that you may be remembered for. And you never know; you may want to come back one day in the future or, at the very least, you may need a reference. Unfortunately, many people don't always end up quitting their job on good terms. So how can you to do it in a way that doesn't burn your bridges? Akhtaboot provides you with some tips to help you make your exit smooth, positive and professional.

IDENTIFY YOUR REASONS FOR QUITTING

Before turning in your notice, be true to yourself about the real reasons why you're quitting. Are you bored? Is it just a phase? Do you feel you've reached your full potential at your current job? Is there a better offer on the table? Doing so will help you state your case clearly and concisely when discussing your situation and reasons for quitting with your manager.

PLAN A SMOOTH EXIT

Once you decide to quit, create a clear and concise manual of the work you used to do so that you leave an easy trail for the person who's going to cover you. Ideally, you will give a one-month notice when quitting, which will give you time to finalise projects, delegate tasks over to others and possibly train another member of staff to take over your tasks. Doing so will leave a positive impression on your managers and coworkers as you won't simply be throwing your work on them expecting them to decode what you've been doing.

STAY ENGAGED UNTIL YOU'RE REALLY OUT

Even after you've made up your mind to leave, try to avoid becoming completely useless. It is not a cue to start leaving early, coming in late, dressing inappropriately and making ongoing comments that you no longer work here. Stay professional and courteous until the day you actually leave.

CHECK BACK ON YOUR SUCCESSOR

Even after leaving your job, it may be a nice touch to call back into the office to check on those who have picked up your work. Offer to give them further guidelines and direction if needed and don't be afraid to contact your previous boss to ask the same question. This will show your previous employer that you really care about your work and that you are being an A-class professional.

SECURE SOLID REFERENCES

During your notice period, approach two or three individuals for references while your relationship with them is still fresh. Ask for their testimonials in writing and be strategic when choosing your reference. Make sure to pick those who have a positive energy both in writing and on the phone. If the timing isn't right to get a reference from your current boss, consider reaching out to clients, colleagues, and other managers who may have had direct contact with you during your time at the company.

Leaving your job in a planned and graceful way is often as important as you starting a new one. When you finally reach the point that you feel you are ready to quit your current role, the situation is no longer just about you. It is really about the people you are leaving behind at the company, including your boss and your coworkers. In other words, your main focus when quitting a job in style should be how you can work with your manager to make the transition as easy and as smooth as possible for everyone involved. Keep in mind that leaving a job on bad terms can often have long-range consequences and should always be avoided if possible. ●

RTA and DED in partnership

RTA signs deal with Department of Economic Development, paving the way for an e-link between the parties.

COMMON GOALS

The RTA has signed an agreement for cooperation with the Department of Economic Development (DED) in Dubai, paving the way for realising common objectives through establishing an electronic link between the respective systems of the two entities, offering much-improved services to customers in the transportation field.

The agreement was signed at the RTA Head Office by the CEO of the RTA's Licencing Agency, Ahmed Hashim Bahrozian, and the CEO of the DED's Business Registration and Licencing Sector, Mohammed Shael Al Saadi, in the presence of several officials from both parties.

Commenting on the agreement, Bahrozian said, "This cooperation is part of the RTA's drive to enter into a multitude of agreements with various public and private entities in the UAE, under the ultimate objective of better serving the needs of clients and easing the process of availing of such services. It demonstrates the RTA's firm attention to diversifying

THE RTA'S AHMED HASHIM BAHROZYAN AND THE DED'S MOHAMMED SHAEL AL SAADI AT THE AGREEMENT CEREMONY

the platforms of interacting with the public, and sharing expertise and skills with other entities in a bid to uplift the quality of processes, and provide best-in-class services in the interest of all stakeholders. "The agreement with the DED is of great significance as it promises to bring about huge positives in realising the intended objectives, particularly noting that it aims to establish an e-link between the two parties, providing for the licensing of transportation establishments as per RTA guidelines and technical stipulations in place. The agreement also provides for exchanging online information relating to a host of issues, such as the compatibility of issuing, renewing, abolishing and amending commercial licences in the transportation sector, exchanging information about policies and systems, and coordinating the e-link of businesses operating in the transportation sector," explained Bahrozian.

Al Saadi, meanwhile, praised the cooperation with the RTA, which, he said, reflects the attention of government entities to boosting their joint cooperation by entering into agreements incorporating creative and positive ideas, which both uplifts the calibre of business processes, and delivers superb services to customers in an accurate, handy and transparent style.

"This agreement is made under the DED's strategy, aimed at overcoming difficulties encountered by business leaders, investors and holders of commercial licences in order to ease the process of practising business and commercial activities, which will boost the profile of the emirate as a global hub and a driver of the economy at all levels," Al Saadi said.

RTA targets university students

RTA invites students to design posters raising awareness of driving distractors, and offers prizes to winners.

AWARENESS

The RTA recently rolled out a new traffic contest, targeting more than 5,000 university students, by inviting them to come up with creative designs in the form of a poster to raise awareness of driving distractors.

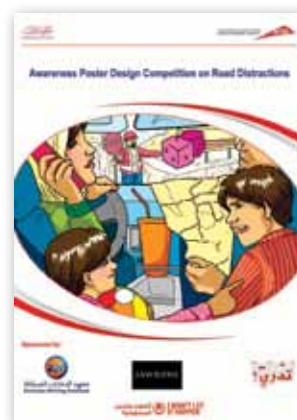

According to engineer Maitha bin Udai, CEO of the RTA's Traffic and Roads Agency, "The idea of the contest is based on motivating students to innovate and create modern, artistic designs for a poster sending warnings of risks adversely impacting drivers' attention while driving, such as using the mobile phone."

She noted that the RTA collaborated with Emirates Driving Institute, the social networking website, Tedry.com, and Jawboon to reward the best three participants with cash prizes and gifts.

"Engaging college students in this contest marks the second time for them to be involved in artistic traffic awareness activities organised by the agency in collaboration with colleges and universities in Dubai, after the first awareness contest was launched back in 2010 to produce an awareness movie about the safe driving distance, where the RTA honoured the winners in a mega-event held especially for this purpose," she added.

"The Traffic and Roads Agency launched this contest at the beginning of October, this year, at the Men's Higher College of Technology in Dubai, and the event will roll on to cover 10 colleges and universities, targeting more than 5,000 male and female students by sending them personal invitations to participate in the contest. The contest will run until the end of December, this year, with the top three winners being announced in January 2013. "This year, the agency is seeking to apply new techniques in communicating with the categories targeted by the traffic awareness programmes, especially the youth in universities and school students. Traffic contests, for which encouragement prizes have been allocated, will help us motivate the target groups, and enhance communication with them," bin Udai explained.

Submissions have to be for individuals, and clearly replicate the idea of driving distractors. Innovation, creativity and focusing on traffic safety would be the key standards upon which the judgment of a jury panel, consisting of staff from the Traffic and Roads Agency and advertising specialists, would be based.

Recipe

Cheesy fish casserole

Try this tasty dish for a wholesome dinner with the family.

Ingredients

Cooking spray oil
Bunch of fresh spinach
1 tspn garlic salt
Fresh cod, cut into large pieces
1 lemon, zested and juiced
1 tbsp chopped fresh dill
1 tspn sea salt
1/2 tspn cracked black pepper
1 cup shredded Cheddar cheese
1/4 cup Italian-seasoned bread crumbs
1/4 cup panko bread crumbs

Method

1. Preheat the oven to 230 degrees Celsius. Spray a large casserole dish with cooking spray.

2. Evenly spread the spinach in the bottom of the prepared casserole dish and sprinkle with garlic salt. Arrange the chunks of fish on the spinach, keeping the pieces side by side and larger pieces toward the outside of the dish. Top the fish with lemon zest, lemon juice, dill, sea salt and black pepper.

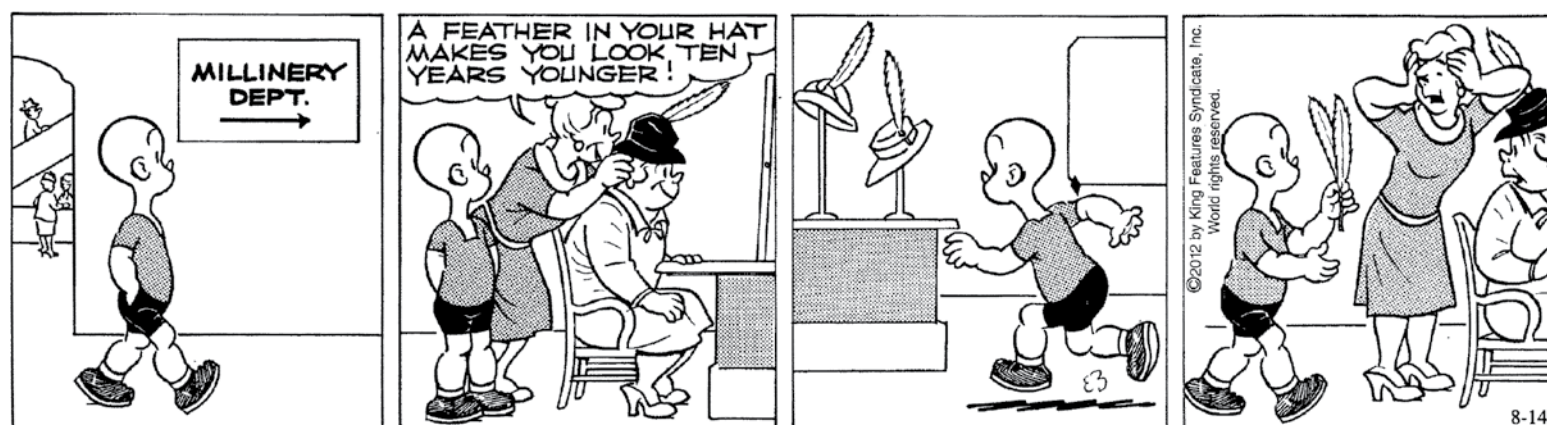

3. Combine the Cheddar cheese, Italian-seasoned bread crumbs and panko bread crumbs in a bowl, then spread evenly over the fish. Cover the casserole dish with aluminium foil.

4. Bake in the preheated oven for around 15 minutes, then uncover and cook for another 15 minutes, until the fish flakes easily with a fork and the topping is lightly browned and crunchy.

What's in your stars?

The Read. astrologer tells you what you can expect over the next seven days.

ARIES

(MAR 21 - APR 20)

A subject that you've been studying for a long time might suddenly start making sense to you. Your frame of mind now is especially clear, focused and efficient, so whatever you try to complete, or even start, this week is likely to lead you to success.

TAURUS

(APR 21 - MAY 21)

Skills you didn't even know you had could enhance your ability to deal with practical matters. You might need to handle some paperwork regarding a settlement of some kind. The feelings of those closest to you may become more apparent than usual.

GEMINI

(MAY 22 - JUN 21)

Social events are on the agenda. You may be introduced to someone who could prove helpful to your career, or good news could come from a friend. Any money-making enterprise begun now is likely to succeed as long as you continue in a focused manner.

CANCER

(JUN 22 - JUL 23)

Glowing health and an enthusiastic attitude make almost anything a pleasure this week. Relations with friends and family are warm, congenial, and co-operative. Consider attending a class, lecture, or workshop—your mind is especially sharp right now.

LEO

(JUL 24 - AUG 23)

Information that comes your way could launch a search for truth. Perhaps this is a business-related idea that you want to explore or a new interest that you want to learn more about. Your mind is sharp, so you're likely to finish the week a lot more knowledgeable.

VIRGO

(AUG 24 - SEP 23)

Although you're usually responsible and try to keep a proper balance between your home and professional life, your mind and heart are more focused on your home. A warm sense of unity with family and close friends could make for a very pleasant week.

LIBRA

(SEP 24 - OCT 23)

A gathering in your community could unite people in aiming for a common goal, which could be a new interest for you. Warm emails and calls could come from family and close friends, while a spontaneous trip could result in a pleasant surprise.

SCORPIO

(OCT 24 - NOV 22)

You may have been expecting some money and this week it could finally arrive. Delays in reaching your goals are a thing of the past now, so if you have a project you've been trying to complete, this is the right time to do it—especially if it involves paperwork.

SAGITTARIUS

(NOV 23 - DEC 21)

Your thoughts are more focused than usual and your mind especially penetrating. A promised get-together with friends or loved ones may have to be delayed, but it will take place. The outlook on anything that comes your way this week is especially bright.

CAPRICORN

(DEC 22 - JAN 20)

Practical thoughts may be the result of unconscious impulses brought to the surface. Old traumas and phobias could be released, although you should take care to not dwell on them too much or you'll reinforce them instead of get rid of them.

AQUARIUS

(JAN 21 - FEB 19)

Family gatherings could bring new information your way and a message from an acquaintance could send you down a new path. Relations with everyone around you should be warm and congenial, so enjoy the opportunity to spend quality time together.

PISCES

(FEB 20 - MAR 20)

Success in a project you've been working on could mean you want to go out and celebrate. You might feel guilty about doing it, but go ahead. This is a time for you to forget the stresses of work and enjoy yourself after all your efforts have finally been recognised.
