✉ SOCIALLY AWARE

Nowadays, information travels within the social media sphere so fast that putting a hold on it is a nearly impossible feat. It spreads like a cyber wildfire, and attempting to extinguish it is like fighting a battle that has already been lost. So, just one glaring slip when taken interest of by the public at large, can spell disaster and even deal irreparable damage in some cases. People should not take for granted the power that social media holds—use it responsibly.

Margaret Bennings

✉ MANNERS MAKE A MAN

Real men know how to treat women well, and with respect. But in this one particular case that I am going to share shows that there are men who still dwell inside caves. I spotted a vacant seat upon entering a train cabin of the Metro. Suddenly, there was this caveman of a man who rushed ahead, shoved me out of the way, sat himself proudly on the seat, stared up at me with a gnarly look that declared 'I am the man' and directed his palm at my face! I was absolutely dumbfounded and awestruck at how rude this was. I just can't believe that there are still breeds of men who are living in the pre-historic age—shouldn't they be extinct by now?

Doing good in 2014

Dubai has many charitable organisations through which volunteers can do a world of good.

and leisure facilities for children suffering from illness, disability or poverty, wherever and whenever they occur', or a similar social organisation, may be a good choice.

'A salient factor of all the projects supported is that they are run at the local level, thus ensuring that as much of the money donated as possible goes directly towards the needs of the children,' the foundation says.

Alternatively, Gulf for Good, which was established in 2001 under the patronage of Sheikh Ahmed Bin Saeed Al Maktoum, might appeal to many, especially to those who have a yearning for exploring the unknown.

“A quick search on Google will reveal the wealth of volunteer projects, fundraising drives and social groups that provide a platform for anyone to make a difference.”

'We organise exciting adventure challenges around the world inspiring people to do something unusual. Participants raise funds, which are then donated to handpicked charities in the region where the challenge is held,' the charity says.

This year, challenges include a 500km cycle ride in southern Laos to benefit impoverished children in the country, a trek through the Atlas mountains to help disadvantaged children in Morocco, and an expedition through the wilds of Mongolia.

'We hear constantly that the challenges we organise make a huge difference to peoples' lives. Obviously the recipients of the funds benefit enormously, but doing the challenge itself often turns out to be a life-changing experience for many challengers,' adds Gulf for Good.

These are but two examples of Dubai organisations looking for members. Just go online to find out more about these and many others so you can start giving back this year. ●

Caring city

Dubai's International Humanitarian City (IHC) has grown to become the world's largest and busiest logistics hub for humanitarian aid with nine UN agencies and nearly 50 NGOs and commercial entities as members. Around 70 per cent of the emergency response to the Syria conflict is being served by the IHC.

The start of a new year provides the opportunity for a wealth of new lifestyle choices, and as many of us in this city find we are better off than many who are also striving to make the most out of life, the idea of giving something back to the community is tempting.

The good news is there are many outlets for altruism in Dubai. A quick search on Google will reveal the wealth of volunteer projects, fundraising drives and social groups that provide a platform for anyone to make a difference.

From official, state-sanctioned charities to non-profit organisations, they specialise in a wide range of areas of the community, and some work hard to protect the environment.

So with this wealth of options, how do you find an organisation that is the right fit for you? This all depends on what you want to achieve this year.

Some people prefer to donate their time—perhaps part of a day each week or a weekend every month—to help an organisation with fundraising, collections, transport or administration. To this end, charities like Children's Hope Foundation, which 'provides medical, educational

Allergies on the rise

Although we are seeing more frequent instances of food allergies, they are still misunderstood by many people.

New research suggests that pregnant mothers exposing their unborn child to common allergens might prevent the child from developing corresponding allergies after birth.

The study looked at the consumption of nuts, which are among the most common food allergies in children and adults, during pregnancy, and how this might increase tolerance in later life.

'[This] supports the hypothesis that early allergen exposure increases the likelihood of tolerance and thereby lowers the risk of childhood food allergy,' wrote researchers from a number of hospitals and universities in the recent study, which was published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

“Food allergies are the result of the body’s immune system mistakenly perceiving food as harmful and then attacking it.”

The researchers added that a number of studies that have previously been conducted on animals often found that maternal exposure to certain foreign substances during pregnancy and breastfeeding resulted in a protective effect in this regard. However, similar studies on humans have been far less consistent.

Food allergies are the result of the body's immune system mistakenly perceiving a food as harmful and then attacking it. The symptoms can be relatively mild, with little more than light swelling, all the way through to life-threatening conditions such as anaphylaxis. Allergies, especially towards nuts, have been rising quickly, and in the United States alone, they increased by around 50 per cent between 1997 and 2011. Researchers, however, are still unable to explain this trend.

Although stories involving food allergies are commonly reported in the media, the reality is that they are not as widespread as many people believe, with America's Centres for Disease Control estimating that only between four and six per cent of children in the country suffer adverse reactions to food.

Last month, scientists at Imperial College London, after studying 60 years' worth of data, found that a European was more than three times likely to be murdered than to die from an allergic reaction to food.

Did you know?

A Canadian company has invented a device that can determine exactly what is in its user's food and beam the readings directly to his or her smartphone. Toronto-based TellSpec developed a spectroscopy data-crunching algorithm that works in the Cloud and can now be manufactured cheaply for consumer use.

A COMMON CAUSE FOR CONCERN

'We don't want to belittle the concerns of people with food allergies or their families, and of course people should continue to take reasonable precautions,' wrote Dr Robert Boyle, from the university's Department of Medicine, in the recent journal titled Clinical and Experimental Allergy.

"That said, we want to reassure them that having a food allergy makes a very small difference to someone's overall risk of death."

The United States Department of Agriculture has identified the eight most common food allergies in America, which together account for nine out of 10 total instances. These are: wheat, crustacean shellfish, peanuts, soybeans, eggs, milk, fish and tree nuts.

Parents of children who suffer from allergies should be accustomed to watching out for these ingredients, and not be afraid to ask when there is a chance of exposure to them.

Even though the instance of a critical reaction to food is unlikely for many people, it is always better to be safe than sorry. ●

TRAVEL NEWS

DTCM organises GCC Tourism Conference 2013

Dubai's Department of Tourism and Commerce Marketing (DTCM) recently hosted the GCC Tourism Conference 2013 - an annual travel trade event designed to promote Dubai's destination offering to its Gulf neighbours. CEOs and top management of tour operators and travel agents attended the two-day event from Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain and Oman.

Over the course of the conference, GCC travel agents and tour operators met with governmental and private entities in Dubai to gain an understanding of the emirate's destination offering and to generate fresh ideas on how to collaborate on increasing visitor numbers to Dubai from the GCC region.

The conference was attended by representatives from a number of DTCM's key industry partners including Emirates, flydubai, Dubai World Trade Centre, Dubai Immigration, RTA and Dubai Shopping Malls Group. The agenda featured updates on new projects, tourism offers and packages; as well as panel discussions on partnership opportunities between Dubai's tourism industry stakeholders and GCC travel agencies. A key focus of discussion was how Dubai's recent winning of the bid for Expo 2020 would stimulate growth in the region's tourism industry.

Ahmad Khalifa AlFalasi, DTCM's CEO of Support Services, said: "Expo 2020 will have a significant impact on the tourism industry of Dubai and the UAE, providing a platform on which to communicate the remarkable story of a young city and nation."

Cape Town's culture and colours

A city of amazing natural beauty, incredible culture and design, multicultural heritage and soaring history, Cape Town features on many travellers' bucket lists and is eminently accessible from all four corners of the globe.

Known as the Mother City, its skyline is inimitable, with the wide, flat peak of Table Mountain dominating all views of its cityscape. But then, at ground level, it is about as cosmopolitan as they come, with everything from golden beaches to colourful suburbs that feel as if they have been caught in a time warp.

Its history, too, ranges from the proud to the infamous, and the city has been covered widely by the world's media over the last month following the death of Nelson Mandela, who called Robben Island, in Cape Town's Table Bay, his enforced home for 18 out of the 27 years he served in captivity.

But in spite of its chequered past, South Africa's second city is today youthful, lively and ideal for tourists, while remaining respectful of the aspects of its history that left an indelible mark on the twentieth century.

The city is defined by Table Mountain, although it is not the only natural landscape of beauty, with a wealth of cultivated areas bringing a greater wealth of colour to Cape Town than is expected from most cities. The mountain is also the foundation of a national park, which is popular among locals for the opportunities it provides for hiking, mountain biking and paragliding.

While it takes two hours for Past times

Used as a prison colony from the earliest days of Western settlement until 1996, Robben Island and Nelson Mandela Gateway is now a Unesco World Heritage Site and has been preserved as a memorial to those who gave their lives to the struggle against apartheid. Tickets, however, sell out days in advance during peak season.

somebody of reasonable fitness to climb to the top of Table Mountain, the cable car is a peaceful alternative.

After all the atrocities of apartheid, today Cape Town is proudly multicultural, with Africans and settlers from all over the world coexisting in what is currently a fragile harmony, but one that is strengthening over time.

This year will see the city crowned as World Design Capital 2014, and the 12-month spectacular of using innovative design to transform an already fine-looking city is well under way. The brightly-painted cottages in the Bo-Kaap area should feature on any itinerary, as should the beach chalets of Muizenberg and the striking street art and innovation incubators of The Fringe and Woodstock.

As a city so well geared up to tourism, there is a hotel for every price range. Emirates operates regular flights direct to the city, and the journey takes just under six hours. ●

MINI lines up for gruelling 2014 Rally Dakar bid

MINI is aiming for top honours at the 2014 Rally Dakar with 11 MINI ALL4 Racing cars, run by the X-raid team. In 2012 and 2013, the MINI ALL4 Racing was the car to beat at the toughest marathon rally in the world as Frenchman Stéphane Peterhansel won the most recent two Dakar editions at the wheel of the MINI ALL4 Racing of the X-raid team.

The 2014 Rally Dakar promises to be another milestone in the history of MINI. Never before have more MINI ALL4 Racing cars been lined up at the Dakar than at its 36th edition. "I think we are going in the right direction," said Stéphane Peterhansel.

"I won the last two rallies, but it does not mean anything for the next event, as each rally is new chapter," he added.

In 2011, the MINI ALL4 Racing made its debut at the legendary Rally Dakar. Based on the MINI John Cooper Works Countryman, the MINI ALL4 Racing proved it was competitive and won the hearts of MINI fans from the word go. Just one year later, five MINI ALL4 Racing cars lined up at the Dakar. MINI made its third appearance on the Dakar stage in January 2013 – once again with five MINI ALL4 Racing cars – and successfully defended its title at the first attempt.

The MINI ALL4 Racing and the X-raid team put in strong performances by winning two important events before the 2014 Dakar: the FIA Cross-Country Rally World Cup drivers' title with Poland's Krzysztof Holowczyc and the challenging OiLibya Rally of Morocco with the Argentinean Orlando Terranova, both at the wheel of a MINI ALL4 Racing.

Fiat proves that good things do come in small packages.

One of the toughest marketing jobs in the car industry is taking a much loved classic and making it a) relevant in the current market and b) not making it into a parody of its former self.

BMW struggled with reinventing the Mini at first, but now seem to have got it nailed, especially with the JCW editions. Volkswagen failed with the Beetle.

The problem seems to be fitting the creature comforts into a modern chassis, whilst retaining the whole essence that made the original funky in the first place. VW had to move the Beetle's engine to the front to incorporate modern technology (although Porsche could argue against that), and BMW had to make the Mini bigger to make it safe enough for modern roads.

So what do you do with the Fiat 500? This is a car that was originally even smaller than the much-loved Mini and was designed to get Italians moving again after the Second World War. Simple, you do the same. Make it bigger, and redesign it with a modern twist, but retain the essence of what made it popular to start with.

Amazingly, the 500 looks just like the original, with its perfectly designed nose, bubble car body and headlights that just scream out for a smiley mouth to be stuck on between them. This car has a face and it's a friendly one at that.

But the 500 Lounge Convertible also gets the added advantage of a retractable roof, so should the weather come over all Italian you can enjoy its warming rays on your head as you pop down to the local coffee shop for an espresso.

Inside it's quite roomy considering its size, and the new car retains the old model's painted dashboard. You can even squeeze a couple of shortish adults in the rear. There's Bluetooth for your phone, a decent stereo and navigation. Not bad for such a small package

Power comes from a 1.4l engine, which is surprisingly willing, although you'll need to stir the gearbox to get it really moving. The little Fiat can cut it on the highway, but its natural home is the city, where its quick steering and well-planted suspension make it ideal for nipping in and out of the traffic.

The lower range models will be a little too cute for the male members of society, but that's fine, as Fiat tuner Abarth has a range of fire breathing models for drivers that want a little more muscle.

Either way, the 500 Lounge Convertible is a great little hatchback that has managed to accurately capture the soul of what made the original 500s so well-loved by so many people. If you want to smile on your way into the office each day, then make the journey in a 500.

After all we all just want to be happy, right? ●

Samsung launches DSF 2014 special prizes promotion

Samsung is offering shoppers the chance to experience and win a range of devices as part of its Dubai Shopping Festival 2014 promotion. Shoppers purchasing any Samsung item from participating retailers up until the end of DSF have the chance to enter into a daily prize draw, making them eligible to win up to Dh10,000 worth of Samsung products.

With six bundled prize options to choose from, winners could walk away with anything from a 50-inch F6400 smart TV with Galaxy Note 10.1 and Galaxy S4 smartphone to a RSH7ZNP refrigerator with a Galaxy Note 3 and Galaxy camera. Other prizes on offer include a Galaxy Note 10.1 book cover, WD0804RWN washing machine and a MC455THRCR microwave oven.

Young Soo Kim, President of Samsung Gulf Electronics, said: "Every year Samsung ups the ante at the DSF because we see it as an opportunity to thank our customers for choosing our products and this year is no different. Our growth in the region has been remarkable and that is in part due to shopping festivals like the DSF."

If you consider yourself highly knowledgeable when it comes to all things tech, you might want to head to the Mall of Emirates, where competitions will also run around the themes of the six prize options. Make your way through levels of questions on the products, get them right and you may be the owner of the latest shiny Samsung handheld devices, accessories and home appliances.

Shoppers should also keep their eyes peeled for Samsung's 'Spin the Wheel' pop-up tables that will make their way around key retail outlets each weekend during DSF.

The dawn of the superfan

Businesses are discovering the real value of fans who are happy to do their brand marketing for them.

Start of the superfan

The term "superfan" has its roots in a regular sketch on the American comedy show, Saturday Night Live, and featured Mike Myers and other comedians as overweight, dedicated sports fans from Chicago. They were once honoured by the presence of basketball star Michael Jordan, with whom they hula danced.

A study earlier this year by social media marketing firm Syncapse found that the average value of a Facebook fan to a brand is $174, a 28 per cent increase over 2012.

Most people reading this will consider this figure nothing if not bizarre. Indeed, how is it possible to put a price on something as virtual and hypothetical as a thumbs-up sign on a computer screen? But marketers love things like this.

At a time when many international companies devote up to half their advertising spend towards online and social outlets—and some even forsaking many traditional platforms—knowing the value of a fan is essential to increase awareness and profits.

As a result, brands have been flocking to find what they call "superfans". These are people who love sharing on Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest and other social sites, and through them, companies can achieve what they cannot through TV advertising, for example; seeing their products go viral.

Social media superstars like to be seen to break news first and often have large followings. By identifying who these people are and keeping track of their likes and habits, canny social strategists can enable them, build relationships with them and even measure the return that these people have on their brands.

"Keep your brand advocates close to your brand. Make sure they're the first to know about upcoming events or stories related to your brand," says Andy Karuza, CEO of brandbuddlee.com, a prominent American social media consultant. "If they feel like you're taking care of them for being awesome fans, they could potentially do 80 per cent of the heavy lifting in terms of marketing."

No wonder the value of Google and Facebook advertising is quickly growing when a business can get its own customers to market for it.

But the biggest misconception about a superfan is that they are the loudest in the room. The truth is that they are usually thoughtful and open to conversations. What's more, they like to get others involved.

"A superfan has the social wherewithal to understand that they're not the only person on a brand's Facebook Page. They create value by starting new conversations, reviving old ones, and otherwise attracting other fans," according to social software strategist Napkinlabs.

The chances are that, even if you're not a social media maven, you will have played your part in marketing another company's products. One day, we might even get paid for it. ●

Why you weren't hired

Could one of these common factors be the reason why you didn't get that new role you really wanted?

DON'T FALL AT THE FIRST HIRING HURDLE

are genuinely interested in the position and make it clear that you are fine with the lower pay that comes with the position.

WE DON'T LIKE YOU

Since personal characteristics are usually not part of the job description, when it comes down to finding the right candidates, the deciding factor may actually be "likeability". No one wants to work with arrogant, negative, troublemakers who will not be able to get along with their colleagues. This is all about your ability to get along with your colleagues. You need to show the willingness and the ability to be harmonious with others; if you cannot do that, do not expect a call back.

YOU DID NOT MAKE A GREAT FIRST IMPRESSION

We often hear that first impressions matter. It actually could be the

CAREER CHANGES

One of the top complaints one often hears from job seekers is that employers never call them back. It is frustrating as it makes them wonder if their application was actually seen or if they just did not make the cut. While some employers will occasionally give rejected candidates some feedback about where they need to improve or what went wrong, the majority of employers hold back on telling candidates why they were rejected. Whatever might be the reason for being rejected, you need to be prepared to increase your chances of getting the job. You can start by avoiding the top job seeker behaviours employers hate. Akhtaboot reveals the top reasons employers will not share why they did not hire you.

YOU EXAGGERATE YOUR QUALIFICATIONS

It should always be noted that employers look for honesty in a candidate. But many job seekers believe that there is no room for modesty when it comes to job searching. From exaggerating on your CV to never admitting even one weakness during the interview, any false information will be noticeable, as you might not be able to support the information you have presented. Employers will always prefer people who are open, honest and speak straight, face-to-face.

YOU ARE OVER QUALIFIED FOR THE POSITION

Giving the impression that you have more experience than the job requires will give the impression that you do not really understand what the job is all about. Hiring managers will also assume that your salary expectations are probably higher than the role pays and they will disregard your application. The best thing that you can do in this situation is to understand these valid concerns and address them early on. Start by explaining why you differentiating factor between you getting the job or not. During the interview, judgments are being made on both your appearance and behaviour. From the way you shake hands to the way you smell, or the way you are dressed to the way you talk. This sounds obvious but you would be surprised how often people get it wrong. Depending on where you are interviewing, make sure that you come across as the perfect fit for the role. Make sure that you know how casual the company that you are interviewing at is; looking far too formal or under-dressed for the company might give a negative vibe about your candidacy. ●

Old favourites

Rework last year's fashion trends to create a wardrobe that feels new.

STYLE WATCH

While every season brings a new fashion trend, it also brings about many recurring trends. Rather than splurge on a whole new wardrobe for spring 2014, rework your current clothes in a fashionable way.

Shift it

Shift style blouses and T-shirts are hot for spring 2014. Pair your festive metallic tunic with stylish black trousers and heels for a casual smart look in the New Year.

Sweaters

A few of the upcoming spring trends are repeats from previous seasons, so we loved that the runways were full of fine knit sweaters and cashmere. Wear an old royal blue sweater or rich coloured knitwear from fall 2013 and pair it with a gorgeous spring 2014 pleated, knee-length skirt for an updated version of the look. Coral hues look great when worn with denim jeans and a simple black bag and heels.

Pastels

It's no surprise that pastels are on trend for spring 2014. Every year the runways are full of pretty candy floss hues and feminine shades. Rock a pale pink dress with black accessories or a chic, coral tunic dress with white sandals and a clutch for a fresh take on the trend.

Wide-leg trousers

The spring/summer runways for 2014 have been bursting with an array of wide-leg trousers, from patterned to pleated or floor-sweeping styles. Designers such as Alexander Wang and J. Crew featured cool, high-waisted versions. If you purchased a pair of wide-leg trousers during the fall season then now is the time to hunt them out of your wardrobe. A bright red pair looks great paired with a crisp white shirt and contrasting black statement necklace and black pointed courts. Top it up with a patent black clutch for a business-savvy look.

Masculine striped pants

Spring 2014 will see a modern take on sportswear with the creation of tuxedo inspired athletic trousers. If you have a pair of tailored tuxedo trousers, pair them with a crisp white shirt, braces and stiletto heels for a contrasting and on-trend look.

Back to brilliance

The Scorsese-DiCaprio partnership reaches new heights in The Wolf of Wall Street.

NEW RELEASE

Nobody can add more weight to a biographical picture than Martin Scorsese, which means he is the perfect director to chronicle the rise, hubris and downfall of one of Wall Street's most notable villains, even before the global financial meltdown began in 2007.

And once again, in The Wolf of Wall Street, Scorsese has worked alongside Leonardo DiCaprio, who plays Jordan Belfort, upon whose autobiography the film is based. A partnership that now spans five movies, including Gangs Of New York, The Aviator, The Departed and Shutter Island, the pair always seem to get the best out of each other, as they once again have done in this outing.

From language (it currently holds the record for the most instances of profanity in a mainstream movie) to its salacious content, The Wolf is by no means a family movie.

While many films have been made since the current financial crisis to make sense of the behaviour of money men as the authors of deceit and greed, Scorsese's work looks back to the freewheeling 1990s as his canvas.

Belfort was a New York stockbroker who used his charm, force of personality and network of money-hungry lowlifes to further his ambitions through the use of penny stocks. Quickly his firm becomes a billion-dollar company, and every aspect of his life descends into hedonism and debauchery.

As his wealth and power grows, the brilliant but increasingly corrupt Belfort ignores the fact that he has raised the attention of the FBI, such is his confidence. Believing he is untouchable, he even ramps up his operations and travels the world to maximise his ability to earn money and rip off his customers.

At the same time, DiCaprio raises his game to a level previously unheard of for the already accomplished actor. In The Wolf, the 39-year-old crosses over from star to great as he lives his part in a way he has never done before.

And he has to work hard to stand out, given the wealth of talent in his support, with Jonah Hill (Superbad) coming of age as Belfort's business partner, legendary director Rob Reiner as his father and even Matthew McConaughey briefly swaggering on stage as his mentor.

It would be easy for any director to paint the main protagonist as a greedy, conniving hedonist, but instead Scorsese focuses on the highly complex side of his personality who is thoroughly bad, while at the same time driven by his desire for wilder experiences and self-punishment as the Feds close in. And, to his credit, at no time does the director act as an apologist: with Belfort, what you see is what you get. ●

MONEY MAD

Did you know?

Jordan Belfort, who ended up spending 22 months in prison and now earns money as a motivational speaker, worked closely with Leonardo DiCaprio to coach him on the finer aspects of his character. Belfort also appeared in a cameo in the film's final scene, in which he introduced his cinema stand-in.

Hollywood news

Psy's own style

K-Pop hero Psy has admitted that his follow-up to Gangnam Style fell short of the mark and has promised to go back to basics for his next release. "It was a song that wasn't really me," the South Korean pop singer told reporters about Gentleman during a recent concert in Seoul. "My new songs will mark a return to my roots and be truer to who I am."

'Insensitive' Beyoncé

Beyoncé has been branded insensitive after using recordings from the 1986 Challenger disaster on a song for her new album.

"This song is emotionally difficult for the Challenger families, colleagues and friends," said the widow of one of the astronauts. All seven crew members aboard the Challenger perished in the disaster.

Obama warns aides against spoilers

A TRUE TELLY ADDICT?

Barack Obama is a big Breaking Bad fan, but has to remind others not to spoil the ending as he is quite far behind in the blockbuster television series.

Speaking to The New York Times, friends of the American President revealed that Obama is also a big fan of British period drama series Downton Abbey and the updated House of Cards, which tells of conniving and intrigue in the corridors of American power in Washington DC.

In the past, Obama has let it be known that he especially enjoyed the series Homeland and David Simon's The Wire, and is catching up on Mad Men by watching DVD box sets in his spare time.

On the AMC cable show, which portrays the New York advertising world of the 1960s, the President's friends told the Times how he had confided about how he had particular affection for the character Peggy Olson, played by Elisabeth Moss, for giving him insight into how his strong-willed grandmother dealt with life in a man's world over the same period.

Believe bombs at the box office

Recently retired Justin Bieber (or at least that's what he announced on Twitter last week, although his agents firmly assert that this is not the case) has suffered a dreadful showing at the box office following the release of Believe, his new concert documentary.

The follow-up to Never Say Never, Believe bombed over its first five days, barely taking in $4.5 million and making it firmly the worst performance in its genre, which also features productions by the Jonas Brothers, Miley Cyrus, One Direction and the queen of pop herself, Madonna.

In contrast, Bieber's earlier effort, Never Say Never, opened to $29.5 million in North America and posted a lifetime domestic gross of $73 million, making it the most successful film of its kind, at least in the home market.

The company that has been distributing Believe to North America has pointed out that the movie is only available through a limited run of 1,037 screens, while Never Say Never was screened at almost three times that number. The movie is said to have cost only a total of $5 million to make.

Bollywood news

Farooq laid to rest

Bollywood celebrities paid their last respects to veteran actor Farooq Sheikh, who was laid to rest in Mumbai last week. Sheikh, who died of a heart attack aged 65, passed away in Dubai and his body was moved to India. Although he appeared in many films, theatre was Sheikh's first love.

The name game

Actress Sonakshi Sinha has admitted that her family name alone allowed her to move into the Bollywood film industry with ease. However, she added that it was entirely up to the actor or actress whether they made the most of their opportunity once they have starred in a role.

Doshi to ditch SA?

A delay by South African authorities has led director Gaurang Doshi to threaten to move two upcoming blockbusters to Australia. Doshi has already threatened to withdraw his application and is now considering taking Happy Anniversary and Big B-starrer Aankhen 2 away from the country, along with their star casts.

Trisha loves Salman

Speaking to Karan Johar, southern starlet Trisha Krishnan has revealed her desire to marry Salman Khan. Krishnan, who made her Bollywood debut with Priyadarshan's Khatta Meetha, admitted to Johar that she has had a crush on the bachelor since she was a child, although she is yet to share screen space with Khan.

Land in Dubai, take-off on the Metro.

Once you've landed in Dubai, the Metro is a quick, convenient and inexpensive way to reach your desired destination. The Metro departs from Airport Terminals 1 and 3 every 3 minutes at peak hours and 4.5 to 8 minutes at off peak hours daily stopping at 47 stations around the city. If you're worried about your luggage, don't be, you can carry up to two suitcases with you on the Dubai Metro. Suitcases should not exceed (81cm x 58cm x 30 cm) and (55cm x 38cm x 20cm).

Travel smart, take the metro.

Recipe

Pasta-free lasagna

This tasty, vegetarian-friendly dish is also low in carbs.

Ingredients

3 tbsp olive oil
 1 finely chopped onion
 3 crushed garlic cloves
 2 x 400g tins chopped tomatoes
 Salt and pepper
 2 large aubergines
 1 ball mozzarella, drained and sliced

Serves

Method

1. Preheat the oven to 200C and heat one tablespoon of olive oil in a frying pan.
2. Once the oil is hot, add the onion and a pinch of salt. Fry for five minutes, or until softened. Add the garlic and continue to fry for a further two minutes.
3. Add the chopped tomatoes and mix well. Season with a pinch of salt and pepper and bring to a simmer. Reduce the heat and leave to simmer gently for 20-30 minutes, or until the tomato sauce is thickened.
4. Meanwhile, slice the aubergines into slices 5mm thick. Brush the slices with olive oil and season with salt and pepper on both sides. Heat a griddle pan (or grill if you don't have a griddle pan), then griddle the slices for a couple of minutes on each side, or until golden brown.

5. Add a spoonful of tomato sauce to the bottom of a medium sized ovenproof baking dish and spread evenly. Top with a third of the aubergine slices.

6. Then layer on a third of the remaining tomato sauce onto the aubergine slices and top with a third of the mozzarella. Repeat this process for another two layers finishing with tomato sauce and the mozzarella.

7. Place into the preheated oven and bake for 25-30 minutes, until the mozzarella is melted and golden brown on top.

ARIES

(MAR 21 - APR 20)

The passing of another year always brings back fond memories of someone you sadly lost years ago. It's fine to feel down for a while, but try to concentrate on the happy memories and the joy that this person brought to so many people's lives.

TAURUS

(APR 21 - MAY 21)

The start of 2014 may bring a variety of happy announcements from friends and family. Rather than feeling pleased, it may leave you with a case of the green-eyed monster. Don't worry if it seems as though you haven't had your moment yet—it's on its way.

GEMINI

(MAY 22 - JUN 21)

Making a little time for an elder could really brighten their week. It may seem like a non-event to you, but even sharing a pot of tea and having a catch up will boost this person's spirits at a time of year when they may be feeling a little left out.

CANCER

(JUN 22 - JUL 23)

Don't let somebody bring you down just because they are upset over something. As much as you may care for this person, trying to make you feel bad for his or her own problems is unfair. Try to avoid inviting negative comments and keep it light.

LEO

(JUL 24 - AUG 23)

It's time to have some fun, Leo. You may have been so busy with other commitments that you simply didn't have enough time to fully enjoy the recent festivities. Pick something that you've always fancied doing, then get out there and do it.

VIRGO

(AUG 24 - SEP 23)

Make sure you take your time over an agreement that could have a big impact on your life, particularly if it involves living arrangements. While others do have an influence over what you choose, it is ultimately your decision so make the best one for you.

LIBRA

(SEP 24 - OCT 23)

You may feel ready to let someone new into your inner circle, and perhaps even start forming a close relationship with this person. Your previous caution and wise decisions mean that you have arrived at this stage just at the right time in life.

SCORPIO

(OCT 24 - NOV 23)

Unfortunately, there is no cure for a broken heart. Even though it may seem as though life is just passing you by right now, those who love you the most just want to see you back on your feet and acting normally may just be their way of helping you up.

SAGITTARIUS

(NOV 23 - DEC 21)

You may be starting to feel a little disillusioned with the world. Watching other people buzz around in their busy lives has lost its excitement and you may feel as though everything is simply for show. Maybe it's time to make an important decision?

CAPRICORN

(DEC 22 - JAN 20)

Forget about what's happened in the past with a colleague, as they could be about to come to your rescue in your hour of need. This will only serve to prove that perhaps your first impressions of people aren't always as spot on as you thought, Capricorn.

AQUARIUS

(JAN 21 - FEB 19)

Pining after things you can't have will only leave you feeling bitter and not good enough. While you may not be quite able to join the 'top of the range' market yet, there are other versions of the items you desire that will leave you just as content.

PISCES

(FEB 20 - MAR 20)

It may seem trivial, but your attachment to a gadget is really starting to agitate someone you are keen to impress. If you are out for dinner then surely you should be focusing on having a meaningful conversation, not on your smartphone?
